

Links worth looking at:

<http://www.nytimes.com/learning/teachers/xwords/index.html> These are student-friendly puzzles. Crossword puzzles are worth every minute you give to them. Also, please find and watch the film, Word Play. It's streamed on Netflix and perhaps other sites as well. Here are some streamers to lure you... <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=TSyXJ18hoZ0> and

You may see some other intriguing info in the side bars too.

Then do a puzzle a day, or at least one a week.

<http://www.boredpanda.com/hand-paintings-annie-ralli/> hand painting. Cool.

Reminds me a bit of the Play with Your Food books. You'll have to click on this hand painting site to see them. I didn't post a picture.

<http://www.creativeblog.com/inspiration/lego-art-1233496> Lego art seems ubiquitous. Here's one site to pique your interest. You'll find plenty more. Here's a great YouTube for starters <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=8CP9hzSm60Y>

I wish I could see these in person. <http://www.boredpanda.com/5-most-talented-3d-sidewalk-chalk-artists/>

This may not be the most amazing 2-D chalk drawing that looks so 3-D (there are just so many), but I live in Florida so this seemed appropriate. Go Gators!

http://www.alphadictionary.com/fun/when_insults_had_class.html This is fun (But keep it to yourself) And here's a Shakespeare Insult Generator <http://insult.dream40.org/> and even larger list for combining and creating your own <http://web.mit.edu/dryfoo/Funny-pages/shakespeare-insult-kit.html> to keep to yourself as well.

<http://www.shmoop.com/> This has everything about practically anything you'd need and it's entertaining to read ("We speak Shmoop") Try not to let the "busyness" turn you off. This site grows daily.

<http://www.christophniemann.com/portfolio/sunday-sketches-2/> These are just awesome. I couldn't decide which to pick to grab your interest. See what he's up to?
