

Links I've grown to love

If you are visiting my website and know of other places that should be shared, please let me know harrellland@cox.net

<http://hubpages.com/education/k12interactivepoetry> Ever since this link that was super popular with my students disappeared <http://ettcweb.lir.k12.nj.us/forms/newpoem.htm>, I've been scouring the web for something comparable without much luck. I'm using this even though I've not check out every single site, but I do know about some of them, and they are good. If anyone finds something similar to ettcweb, please let me know.

<http://www.gigglepoetry.com/poetrytheater.aspx> This link is included on kids + poetry, but it's easy access here.

<https://www.loc.gov/poetry/180/> Billy Collins, past US Poet Laurate, made this website which my students and I have loved ever since it came on line. His poems never grow stale, and he makes good choices of what to share from other poets.

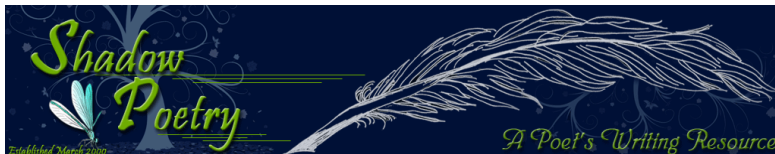

<https://michellehbarnes.blogspot.com/> This is such a fun and informative blog by a woman I know personally who practices what she preaches about writing.

Today's Little Ditty

A poetry playground for the child in all of us.

<http://www.shadowpoetry.com/> I and my students have loved, learned from, and used this site for ages. It's a classic to me.

<http://missrumphiuseffect.blogspot.com/search/label/poetry%20in%20the%20classroom> Here's another site I've visited often.
